Study Claims COVID Caused More Heart Damage Than Vaccines — Here's What the Authors Got Wrong

A 2023 study admitted that the COVID–19 mRNA vaccines cause myocarditis, but claimed the COVID–19 virus was even more damaging than the vaccine. A recent, more detailed review of their data, however, showed the opposite is likely true.

Despite the known side effects of mRNA COVID-19 vaccines, some studies (here, here and here) and health websites (here, here and here) argue that whatever vaccination's adverse outcomes, they're not as bad as COVID.

In one such study, Dr. Christian Mueller and his co-authors concluded the COVID-19 virus — not the vaccine — was responsible for more myocarditis, or heart inflammation, than the vaccine.

However, when Rainer Johannes Klement, Ph.D., a physicist at Leopoldina Hospital in Schweinfurt, Germany, and Harald Walach, a clinical psychologist and head of the Change Health Institute in Basel, Switzerland, examined Mueller's data they found that while coronaviruses might cause myocarditis, the COVID-19 vaccines cause at least as much of a threat.

The Klement paper appeared in the Feb. 1 edition of The Egyptian Health Journal.

"The Wuhan Cover-Up" by Robert F. Kennedy Jr.

ORDER NOW

To assess myocarditis investigators tested 777 hospital workers (median age 37, 69.5% women) for cardiac troponin T one and three days after they received an mRNA COVID-19 booster. Cardiologists typically prescribe this test after a suspected heart attack to quantify the extent and duration of heart damage.

Of the 40 subjects (5.1%) with elevated troponin on Day 3, 22 (2.8%) were diagnosed with myocarditis, with 20 cases occurring in women and two in men.

The researchers reported that among these subjects troponin elevations were mild and temporary and did not involve abnormalities as determined by electrocardiogram. No patients experienced "major adverse cardiac events" within 30 days of receiving the shot.

Mueller's team concluded:

- COVID-19 associates with a substantially higher risk for myocarditis that [sic] mRNA vaccination ...
- Myocarditis related to COVID-19 infection has shown a higher mortality than myocarditis related to mRNA vaccination.
- Before the COVID-19 vaccine were [sic] available, the incidence and extent of myocardial injury associated with COVID-19 infection was [sic] much higher than observed in this active surveillance study after booster vaccination.

One of the Mueller co-authors had commercial ties to diagnostics companies. Another had previously been compensated by diagnostics and vaccine manufacturers. Mueller had relationships with diagnostics, pharmaceutical and vaccine companies at the time he wrote the paper.

Where did Mueller go wrong?

One way to measure treatment effects is to compare an outcome, for example, blood pressure, in the same subjects before and after the treatment and report before-and-after results.

Although this option was known to medical researchers and available to him, Mueller did not take advantage of it — either because he did not think to measure pre-booster troponin levels or chose not to report them for some reason, perhaps because they did not align with his other results.

Instead, his team took an approach that required two well-matched study groups. Although Mueller claimed placebo and controls met this requirement they differed on the feature that mattered most: heart health.

Vaccinated subjects with current or recent heart issues were excluded from the study, while all control subjects had just entered the hospital with heart symptoms and were therefore already at greater risk for myocarditis.

Klement and Walach found more anomalies in the Mueller paper.

They began their critique by citing three 2021 studies on COVID-19 vaccine-induced myocarditis (here, here and here). All three studies showed myocarditis became a concern shortly after the COVID-19 vaccine introductions.

They discussed three papers in some detail:

- A 2023 German autopsy study on 25 unprovoked deaths within 20 days of COVID-19 vaccination identified acute myocarditis as the most probable cause of death in four cases.
- A 2023 report on myocarditis in 303 non-vaccinated and 700 vaccinated asymptomatic subjects found significantly higher damage in the vaccinated persisting for up to 180 days post-vaccination.
- One of the first autopsy papers, an Indian-led study based on World Health Organization pharmacovigilance data reported 2.1 times more deaths in the first week, 2.7 times the risk for acute heart attack, 2.6 times the risk for elevated troponin, and 7.3-fold higher levels of D-dimer for COVID-19 vaccinations compared with the use of other medications.

These studies strongly suggest that myocarditis became an issue only after the mRNA vaccine rollouts. They contradict Mueller's statement that the "extent of myocardial injury associated with COVID-19 infection was much higher than observed in this active surveillance study after booster vaccination."

According to Klement and Walach, this statement is wrong for two reasons.

In addition to the non-equivalence of controls' and subjects' heart-health status, Mueller ignored the much larger number of COVID-19-infected, unhospitalized, unvaccinated individuals with (presumably) much lower troponin levels compared with patients entering the hospital with heart symptoms.

Second, Klement and Walach argued that the public health impact of myocarditis depends not only on the incidence or rate among study groups but the size of those groups. The significance is that a lower incidence in a very large group (vaccinated) is more meaningful than a slightly higher rate in a very small group (individuals infected with COVID-19).

On that basis, Klement and Walach estimated the number of myocarditis cases among all German COVID-19 hospitalizations at 27,467, and among those who were vaccinated at 1.97 million.

As a result, regardless of myocarditis severity, there were 71.7 times as many myocarditis cases among the vaccinated as among those hospitalized for COVID-19.

A similar analysis for Switzerland estimated 169,960 cases of myocarditis among vaccinated compared with 8,179 among those hospitalized for COVID-19. Although not as dramatic as the German estimates this still shows a much higher occurrence of heart damage among vaccinated versus hospitalized.

In a June 2021 paper, Walach, Klement and Dutch data analyst Wouter Aukema estimated that there were about 1,000 adverse reactions, 16 serious injuries and 4.11 deaths for every 100,000 vaccinations, COVID-19 vaccines were released with insufficient safety data.

The authors said the risk-benefit ratio for mRNA vaccines did not add up because "for three deaths prevented by vaccination we have to accept two inflicted by vaccination."

Mueller told The Defender via email:

> "Our study reveals an important lack of prospective safety data concerning COVID-19 vaccines. Given the magnitude of the vaccinated population compared to the much smaller proportion of the population that became infected and developed symptoms, including a small percentage with possible heart damage, our findings should remain quantitatively robust."

If it is not perfectly clear that those who are telling this covid fairy tale will continue to lie in an attempt to cover up their wrongdoing, they marked will be split into two groups. One group will believe the official narrative while the other will source their life from their own being and believe only what rings true to their own heart.

...some studies and health websites argue that whatever vaccination's adverse outcomes, being unvaccinated is worse."
Some unVaxxed Covid patients have had long Covid, but its X-Fanied and "Jryan treated over 10,000 Covid cases with almost no long Covid, after using their treatment protocols. They also had no deaths from Covid, due to keeping them out of the hospital with early treatment.
I would suggest study authors talk to the seriously Covex injured, as they see things differently than those studies and web sites praises.
As for myocarditis, the current technique is Gaslighting: that when it wasn't even an issue discussed in 2020, related to Covid, is now with the Covid shots, more a problem of the unCovexed. It is an illogical conclusion to blame the virus over the shot. But that is what the viewers want to publish, I believe.

COVID was declared 99 percent survivable until big medicine and big govt. got hold of it and people started getting sick and dying, from crap in the masks, from misuse of ventilators, from concentrations of sick persons afflicted with other stuff in poorly ventilated and sanitized rooms, and also from clotshot and other treatments. Hospitals are great places to get sick, and the CDC knows this and knows that the vaccines are killing people. That is why you start with giant clotshot research under fauci, IF fauci and add up the COVID deaths with the deaths attributed to clotshot, its like 400k in the US alone. This edges out medical errors unless you say that the handling of COVID was the ginormous error. Then the COVID wasn't more lethal, or well all be dead. Maybe the chinese will work up another little pet and turn it loose on us...

the myocarditis and heart attacks from the covid vaccine are all around us, everywhere in the community and to deny it is ridiculous - this medical paper from Mueller is junk.

FEBRUARY 9, 2024 Young adults are having heart attacks more often — What's causing it?
Heart disease is the number one cause of death in the United States. In the last few decades, though, with advances in the prevention and management of coronary artery disease, the occurrence of heart attacks in older adults has been declining.

Sidebar: while this is an obvious legitimate issue and corrupt to the core-core-up, there are very conservative (read: scared shitless to commit to the results) studies that show that the COVID vaccine is safer than the flu vaccine. Which is why I'm the most agressive study to date places US healthcare as the #1 cause of death. Covid perpetrators certainly deserve exposure and the rope, and while the outright shining on it is most certainly a good thing, I hope we don't myopically focus on this deadly theatric alone - the whole system is devoid of real science and beyond repair and needs to be burned to the ground and rebuilt. It's is nothing but a profit & deceit machine from the front up.

Thanks for your time and comment Emmanuel, but most folks do not when the original system was performing very good.
August 14th, 2021: How Government Solved the Health Care Crisis!
Today, we are constantly being told, the United States faces a health care crisis. Costs are too high, and too many people are without access to health care. The cause of this crisis is never made very clear, but the cure is obvious to nearly everybody: government must step in to solve the problem.
